In order to correctly engage in conversations, it is important we listen to our friends and family members and provide supportive comments (e.g., "I'm sorry to hear that!") and/or add-on comments (e.g., "That's awesome!"). Additionally, we must continue to ask questions to keep the conversation going and let our friends know we are interested in what they have to say.

Adam is telling Karly about his weekend. Karly's facial expression, body language, and comments show that she is listening and interested. What should Adam have said to Karly after he was done talking about his weekend?

How else could the conversation have been continued?
